Example of a Student Composition Rated in the Low Category

I feel that this poem generalizes what most people think about someone they meet. Most people meet someone and then never think they'll ever meet again. A lot of people will always wonder what might have been, and that's what makes them sad.

The proof is in every line. When the author says "I know: I'll never meet again..." it says he'll never meet that girl again. The author later states, "and yet I'm sad, and don't know why." It points out that he's upset that he's never going to meet her again.
